14 PLANTATION GOLF COURSE BATTLES THE ELEMENTS
The Myrtle Beach area was experiencing a drought when construction began on Wachesaw Plantation Golf Course. Before the course was completed, the construction crews had to battle four hurricanes and another drought. The dramatic course, designed by architect Tom Fazio, was the first private equity golf club in the resort area known as the Grand Strand.

28 THE DAWN OF THE WATER MANAGER
Ken Christley discovered an entirely new occupation as sophisticated computers started taking over large irrigation systems. That is the job of making water managers out of irrigation specialists so large golf courses and parks can maximize the capabilities of the personal computer for irrigation. Christley says the water manager is the key person in future irrigation system management, especially in areas with severe water shortages.

38 COVERS BECOME MULTI-FACETED TOOL
A simple observation by a turf specialist in New Hampshire has grown into a very important contribution to the sports turf manager. By protecting turf with lightweight, translucent covers turf managers can reduce winter kill, get seed to germinate faster and help turf recover from sports damage more quickly.

43 GAINEY RANCH GOLF COURSE: A DESERT SCULPTURE
A very detail-oriented developer in Scottsdale has transformed flat desert into a contoured, colorful golf course with three totally different nines. The Gainey Ranch is a paradise which does not draw a single drop of water from wells or rivers for irrigation purposes. This story takes a look at the team that built the course and maintains it today.
