Ohio Sports Turf Managers Association (OSTMA): OSTMA will host the second annual Regional Chapter Workshop on July 18th at Ohio State University. The event will include presentations by L. Murray Cook, President of Global Stadium Services and President-Elect of STMA; and Steve Trusty, STMA Executive Director; as well as a tour of the OSU athletic facilities, conducted by Brian Gimbel; a tour of the Ohio Turfgrass Foundation Research Center, conducted by Dr. John Street; a tour of Cooper Stadium, home of the Columbus Clippers, conducted by Jeff Limburg; and a tour of Crew Stadium, home of the Columbus Crew, conducted by Darian Daily. The day will conclude with attendees enjoying dinner at the Crew Stadium and then watching a professional soccer game. The Ohio Chapter anticipates attendees from the Michigan, Midwest, Indiana, Tennessee and KAFMO Chapters and issues an open invitation to others to attend. Contact OSTMA or STMA National Headquarters for more information on this event. This event will be followed on July 19th by the OSTMA first Annual "Chapter Challenge" Golf Outing, also in Columbus, Ohio, with the proceeds to benefit the OSTMA scholarship fund. The Chapter also is planning its 4th Annual Fall Field Day at the Ohio State University Intramural Complex on September 11. This event will feature a line-up of speakers in the morning and an afternoon with vendors. OSTMA is accepting scholarship and Field of the Year nominations until October 1, 2001. the same amount of K as N. When high N plus high K rates are combined with low soil moisture, salt levels within the soil may become high and actually reduce water uptake. Other nutrients, should be kept at recommended levels according to soil tests for optimum growth. Supplemental iron applications can provide desirable green turf without promoting succulent shoot growth.

Pests can weaken turf and make it more susceptible to drought, so try to reduce pest problems when necessary. This is particularly true for root feeding insects such as grubs and mole crickets. Weeds also compete with turf for water, so timely weed control is important.

Managing Under Drought Conditions

So now you are in the middle of the drought, your water authority has dramatically limited your irrigation, and you are wondering what to do with those parched fields. First, be a good citizen and follow mandated water restrictions. You don't want the wrath of an angry concerned citizen because you broke the rules, nor do you want to pay any levied fines if you are caught in violation of irrigation restrictions. Irrigate to moisten the upper 10 to 12 inches of soil. For Florida's sandy soil, that is about .75 to 1 inch of water. Irrigate late at night or early in the morning to maximize the water. Second, post some signs and make some phone calls to let the "proper" people know that the fields are currently under imposed water restrictions. This way they know it is not your fault that the fields begin browning.

The turf will reduce growth without adequate water, so mowing needs will be reduced. You will need to mow less often and at the highest height when you mow. Research has shown that turf maintained at a greater height of cut will lose more water per day than turf maintained at a lower height. But, the same studies also indicated that turf mowed lower lost its quality quicker under drought stress because the shallower root system of the more closely mowed turf could not obtain sufficient water under moisture stress. So, raising the mowing height is good insurance because it increases the ability of grass to respond and adapt to stressful conditions.

Postpone or reduce fertilization. Apply low rates of nitrogen to keep color. No more than 0.5 pounds of N per 1000 square feet per application. You don't want to promote lush growth. Recuperation from damage will be dramatically slower than when adequate water is available. This is a good justification to limit the use of the field. If this is not possible, at least keep the decision-makers informed about the damage that may result from excessive use.

I would also suggest that herbicide applications be postponed. Most post-emergence herbicides used on athletic fields can stress a turf even under good conditions. A wise field manager once told me that weeds take on field paint a lot better than dirt.

At this point, there is not much you can do. Everything has its weakest link. Without adequate water, no amount of fertilization, wetting agent, soil amendment, etc., is going to do much good.
