PREGERMINATING UNITS

Liquid Sod Corp. introduces a revolutionary new concept in pregerminating a wide variety of grass seeds, the pregermination unit. It markedly increases seed yields while reducing turf establishment time. The units provide durability and portability with minimum space utilization. Liquid Sod pregerminating units are a low cost, high profit alternative to existing pregerminating methods.

Special features include: Efficient aerating method that reduces fermentation (seed spoilage); Screened drain plug for reduced handling and seed loss; 150 pounds plus capacity; Four models to choose from; Full line of pregermination supplies.

Pregermination is gaining popularity because it provides advantages over conventional seeding methods such as: controlled germinating environment for faster turf establishment, reduced vulnerability to erosion, enhanced competitiveness against weeds, protection against seed consuming predators, and increased customer satisfaction.

Why wetting agent users are turning to Pene-Turf soil treatment.

A continually growing problem for turf managers is that of compaction reduces pore space, resulting in decreased air and water movement through the soil. Wetting agents are often used to temporarily relieve the symptoms, but wetting agents work only of the surface tension of surface water, improving infiltration in the top several inches of the soil.

Pene-Turf Soil Treatment does what a wetting agent will do, but where the wetting agent stops, Pene-Turf continues. Pene-Turf works on the real problem, compaction. Pene-Turf reduces the surface tension of soil water, which allows the compacted soil to shift, and it works several feet deep in the soil. This results in increased pore space, improved percolation, and deeper water infiltration. In addition, Pene-Turf requires less applications than wetting agents and is non-phytotoxic, unlike most wetting agents.
